RHODODENDRON SPECIES

For the past several years we have been growing rhododendron species from seed and now have over 200 species and sub-species. As these plants bloom we are selecting good forms and plan to propagate them from cuttings. However, some species take a number of years to bloom from seed, and some are slow and difficult to propagate from cuttings. Furthermore some regularly produce nice plants that are fairly uniform from seed, so we have decided to offer the following, as mostly unbloomed seedlings.

The seed came from botanical gardens and other sources we consider reliable. However, we have found many lots of rhododendron seedlings contain some plants that are obviously untrue to name or show the effects of cross pollination. We will do our best to select plants that are typical of the species, as indicated by the leaves, but do not attempt to guarantee it. If you get a seedling that produces an inferior, atypical flower let us know and we'll replace it if possible. If you can possibly do so visit our nursery and select your own plants.

Mature rhododendron species vary from large trees to low creepers and seedlings, at a given age, can vary as much. Some are rather narrow and upright, others distinctly spreading, and difficult to designate by ordinary grade size standards, so we are listing by price only. These plants are from 3 to 7 years old. Minimum priced plants of the dwarf species will usually range from 4 to 6 ins. in height, or width, depending on the natural form of the species, and plants at the same price of the larger species will, of course, be larger. Where only price listed is $4 or above we have only plants of the larger sizes. All plants are from the lath house or outside nursery areas.

Descriptions

At this time we are not attempting to furnish descriptions as we presume those rhododendron fanciers who are interested in species will have some reference book on the subject. If you do not have such a book let us send you a copy of "Rhododendrons for your Garden", price $6.95. This was published by the American Rhododendron Society and contains official hardiness and quality ratings of most of the species in this list, together with notes as to size, color, and other information.
